

Lee Honored in Grant Hall.

Chicago Times Herald.

A portrait of General Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., is to be hung in Grant Hall at the West point Military Academy. To every graduate in the army, North and South, the appearance of the face of the great Confederate soldier on the walls of his alma mater, side by side of that of his great antagonist, Grant, means the end of controversy, the end of bitterness, the end of all things sectional. Lee as he appears in his place of honor will not be the gray garbed leader of the lost cause with the stars of a general shining in the field on his shoulder. He will appear in the blue uniform of the old army, with an eagle on the yellow ground of the shoulder knot, denoting the rank of a colonel of cavalry, the position the southern held when he resigned to cast his lot with the confederacy. Colonel Mills, who won promotion at Santiago, where he was shot through the head, is now the superintendent of the military academy. He has been in correspondence with the association of the daughters of the Confederacy, which has agreed to raise the funds for the painting of the portrait and to present it to the academy. Colonel Mills has secured the permission of the war department for the placing of the picture. The thought is held and felt deeply by army officers and army authorities that nothing but good to the coming generations of cadets can come from the proposed honoring of the memory of one of the greatest soldiers who ever owed his military training to West Point on the Hudson.

The coming honoring of Lee forces reminiscences. Since the war of secession the portrait of but one Confederate leader has hung on the historic academic walls—that of Albert Sidney Johnston, of the class of 1826, who gave his life for the South at Shiloh. The portrait of General Johnston was put in place long years before the war on the wall of the army officer's messroom at West Point. It showed him as a subaltern officer of cavalry in the United States forces. Johnston at one time was stationed at West Point, and the officers assembled there as instructors voted to have him manage their mess. The quality of the food and cooking improved so under Johnston's management that his comrades induced him to keep the position of manager instead of having it "rotated," as was the custom. When Johnston was relieved the members of the mess voted to have his portrait painted and hung in the mess. This was done, and the picture stayed there untouched all through the dark days of the war. In the year 1865 there was sent to West Point as a tactical officer Marcus A. Reno, who had won the stars of a brigadier general of volunteers on the battlefield. Reno had gone back to his rank of captain of the regulars at the close of hostilities; Reno had been at West Point on duty but a few days when the picture of Johnston caught his eye. War passions were still high—though another excuse was given for Reno's conduct. He was officer of the day and wore his side arms. He drew his saber in front of Johnston's picture. "A traitor has no place in these walls," he said. There was a "right cut" from a practiced hand and the encircling frame and the picture of the confederate general were cleft in twain. Reno was relieved from duty and sent west. He was dismissed from the service fifteen years afterward for an offense committed on the frontier. At West Point to-day, where "time's effacing finger" has removed the last trace of bitterness, the portrait of Lee will hang honored and in safety.

The showing of a southern soldier's face in the gallery of West Pointers brings to mind a popular misconception on the subject of the number of military academy graduates from the South who left the colors to fight for secession. During the war and ever since, because the facts are not generally known, it was supposed by the people that West Point had educated southern cadets only to have them turn against the government. As a matter of fact—on the authority of General Cullom, who made the matter a study—four-fifths of the graduates held true to the Union, and of those who came from below the Mason and Dixon line one-half fought under the Stars and Stripes. Senators, representatives and federal judges born in Dixie almost to a man threw in their lot with secession. Nearly every officer in the army appointed from civil life in the South went with the Stars and Bars. The students of Yale, Harvard, Princeton and other northern universities who matriculated from the States that seceded went in mass to the ranks of the Confederacy. The influence of family and of birthright of States' rights influence was not sufficient to wean from their Union sworn allegiance a majority of southern graduates. Lee himself had a struggle before he dropped the blue for the gray. No West Pointer doubts that he acted as his conscience dictated. His portrait will be honored when it is put in place near that of the man whom he met at Appomattox.—Edward B. Clark.

The Future of Cuba.

New York, Nov. 8.—"The Future of Cuba," is a paper by Maj. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee which will appear in the Independent to-morrow as follows:

"When will the United States evacuate Cuba? That is a question I am very frequently asked, and I suppose it is natural for people to suppose that from my peculiar facilities for observation in the Island, I might have some knowledge, or at least some opinion about it.

"Nevertheless, I have no such knowledge and no such opinion. With the very best of will on the part of our Government, a desire to keep its pledges and leave the inhabitants of Cuba to enjoy their independence in their own way, there are many difficulties in the way of withdrawal, and whether or not we have in the last six months made progress toward the end, I am unable to say.

"Yet I can say that during the last six months crime has decreased and peace and prosperity are spreading or reviving in a great measure. This, however, seems attributable to the presence of United States troops whom the chief property holders and conservative business men insist must stay. The Cubans themselves seem to be very much divided in opinion as to what ought to be done. Some want an independent government immediately; others insist that Cuba should be annexed to the United States and great numbers of others seem to have no positive opinion regarding the path their country should pursue. There is, of course, on the part of a majority a lack of understanding of the difficulties of self-government.

"At present the census is being taken in Cuba and for the first time we shall have an accurate and reliable enumeration. When that has been finished the experiment of free government by Cubans for Cubans will, I believe, be tried. Precisely in what locality or in what form, I do not know. That is matter for our government to decide, and I have obtained no information of its intention in the matter.

"If it is found that the Cubans can organize and maintain a government on their Island that will protect life and property, undoubtedly we shall withdraw and allow them to go their way along the path of independence, accompanied by nothing more embarrassing than our very best wishes.

"But at present all is tentative, all attempts at government are merely experimental, and not being a prophet I am unable to say what the future holds for the Pearl of the Antilles. I sincerely hope that it is happiness and prosperity in their greatest abundance and in highest form."

Made a Slight Mistake.

Before accepting an invitation it is well to be sure it was given in good faith. After an afternoon service held many years ago in a certain village in Scotland, the preacher, a stranger, who had officiated, accompanied one of the elders of the congregation home, and was introduced to his wife. The good man having asked the clergyman to stay to dinner, the latter, after a little pressing, consented.

The good lady hurried off to prepare for the unexpected guest, and seeing, as she thought, her husband washing as was the custom in those days, at the family sink, she seized the family Bible, approached stealthily from behind and brought down the ponderous tome upon his bald pate, exclaiming:

"Tak ye that for bringing hungry preachers here to dinner every time they come to the parish."

As soon as the assaulted one could get the suds out of his eyes he looked about him, and after thinking the matter out, concluded that the old lady had made a slight mistake. She, too, came to the same conclusion when, on returning to the parlor, she beheld her husband patiently waiting for his reverend friend!

He Fell From Grace.

The Rev. Dr. Herrick, U. S. A., retired, who is known and beloved by soldiers and civilians alike, because of his tender heart and his kindly wit, has this story to tell of an experience of his down at Fort Monroe. He was staying at a hotel there—last spring, I think it was—and among the persons who made his acquaintance were two gentlemen. One of them was a Methodist clergyman, from somewhere in Kentucky, and as his companion had a clerical look and seemed so great a friend to him, Dr. Herrick naturally concluded that the companion, too, was a Methodist. The mention of the town where the Methodist preacher lived reminded Dr. Herrick of a story.

"Do you know Lew So-and-So, out there in Kentucky, the famous horse-man?" he asked.

"Yes," was the answer. The reverend doctor smiled his kindly smile.

"I heard a story about him the other day," he said. "It seems that, besides being a breeder of fine horses, he was a noted character on the race track. Betting and racing were passions with him. The time came, however, when he experienced a change of heart. He was converted and joined a peculiar sect, called Campellites, or Christians, a church of a very recent origin. For several months he kept him to the straight and narrow way, but one day he happened to be driving a very fast horse, when he passed a race track. He dove in, and despite his good resolutions he fell from grace and presently sent his horse around the track in the fashion of his unregenerate days. Somebody saw him and reported him. He was summarily turned out of the church. A day or two afterward a friend met him and asked him if the dismissal from the church had not been a great blow to him. Lew was unexpectedly cheerful. He was not at all cast down.

"No," said he, "I think it served me right. I ought to have known better than to join a scrub church with no pedigree."

The Methodist preacher laughed immoderately. His companion smiled, but in an embarrassed way. The Methodist finally dried his eyes.

"And now, Dr. Herrick," said he, "I want you to know my friend, the Rev. Mr. So-and-So," slapping his companion on the back. "He's the man who turned Lew out of the church."—Washington Post.

Scotchman Struck Trouble.

Donald McAlister, of 437 East Seventy-sixth street, applied to Magistrate Hogan in the Yorkville police court yesterday for a warrant for the arrest of some men who, he said, had assaulted him at an Irish wake last Tuesday night. He went to the wake with another Scotchman, he explained, and when asked to tell a story to while away the time, told why there were no Scotchmen in hell. The story described how two of Lucifer's satellites, sent to earth to bring in a Scotchman for inspection, brought a bulldog in their bag by mistake, and the beast bit the devil so severely that he called his underlings about him and said: "Until the day of judgment never bring another Scotchman here. Go to England and Ireland, where you'll get people without trouble."

As soon as he had finished his story, McAlister said, one of the mourners asked him if he intended to insult the Irish. Before he could answer some one threw a shoe which hit him in the eye. The man next to him hit him on the nose. Several others attacked him on either side and his friends had difficulty in getting him alive out of the house.

"Who are the men that struck you?" asked Magistrate Hogan. McAlister replied that he did not know; they were all strangers to him. The magistrate told him to return to court when he found out who the men were.—New York Sun.

Good, But Unlikely.

The development of the Missouri "zinc fields" brought out almost as many curious and amazing incidents as follow the discovery of a new gold region. The Joplin Index tells one—it has a pathetic side—of a family of ten children, orphans, whose estate consisted of a quarter-section of rich zinc land.

The syndicate that was developing the region wanted the property. The guardian of the children was a shoemaker in Joplin. He had been a friend of their father, and was working hard to keep the estate intact until they should grow up, and to educate them meantime.

After he had refused offers that increased $10,000 at a leap, day after day, he became tired and set a price of $200,000, so that the syndicate would cease bothering him.

It happened, however, that that particular property was a necessity for them, and they would have given twice as much. So they took him up in a twinkling. The court approved the sale, and the amount was then handed over in the form of certified checks.

The shoemaker looked at the papers, found out from the banker that they were "good," and then said to the agent of the syndicate: "Could you give me part cash?"

"Why, my man, you have it all in cash."

"Yes, but I want some of it in—"

"Currency?"

"Yes, I guess that's it."

"Well, how much do you want?"

"I want about 50 cents. I have been promising them children they should have an ice-cream soda as soon as I could afford it, and I know they have been expecting it long enough."

And the syndicate bought the sodas.
